REFUSED A DOCTOR

Asheville People Indicted for Death of Child.

Asheville, Oct. 2.—William Marion Embler and wife, Charles Plommoms and Lewis Ramson, the last a negro, were held for trial on a charge of manslaughter following the returning of a true bill by the grand jury yesterday in which it is charged that through their refusal to allow physicians to attend 10-year-old Ezra Embler they were responsible for the child's death following a long siege of typhoid fever.

Allegations made by officers are to the effect that they depended on prayer to cure the child and kept physicians from the boy's bedside. Their prayers were continuous by day and night, but the little fellow died.

Bonds for the appearance of the four defendants at the next term of superior court were named in the sum of $500 and the three white defendants furnished bail, while the negro went to jail. He refused to employ an attorney, stating that he will depend on prayer to save him. The white people, however, employed counsel.

It is charged that a nurse who was sent to attend the child by the county was unable to perform her work and protect her patient by reason of the loud and boisterous praying of the members of the sect and finally was driven from the house when she demanded that the prayers be less noisy. The conversion of the four to the strange creed followed an open-air meeting conducted by a visiting minister who based his hope in the future and his protection in the present on prayer.

INTERURBAN AGAIN CHARTERED BY STATE

Raleigh, Oct. 5.—The secretary of state has chartered the Rutherford Interurban Railway Company of Rutherfordton, to take over the assets of the North Carolina Interurban Railroad Company recently bought at sheriff's sale, according to resolutions adopted by the stockholders of the Rutherford Interurban Company. The capital stock of the new corporation is $500,000 and that subscribed by the incorporators is $12,000. The new corporation takes over the rights and privileges incorporated in the legislative charter of the North Carolina Interurban, which are specified in Chapter 70, laws of 1911 to be the construction of a line of standard gauge railway from the Atlantic seaboard westward to Asheville, and thence to the west or northwest to the state line. The subscribers to the stock had amount by each stockholder are: A. C. Lineberger, Belmont, 250 shares; S. P. Stowe, Belmont, 250 shares; W. L. Stowe, Belmont, 250 shares; W. B. Ruitt, Belmont, 100 shares; and D. E. Rhyme, Lincolnton, 250 shares.

CLIMAX OF THE WAR

The climax of the colossal European war is approaching. The war may not be, and probably is not, nearing its end, but in a war, as in a battle, there is an hour of crisis. The European struggle now approaches that hour of the crisis. The "drive," "the onward rush of the allies," promised since last spring, is undoubtedly on now. What is more, all the enemies of the Teutonic allies at this, a given signal, have closed around the Germans and their allies, says the Montgomery Advertiser.

The first rush has resulted in a victory for the allies, but it is no decisive victory. On the eastern front, the Russians in the north have actually held the Germans for a week. In the south the Russians, after winning several victories, have actually pushed the Austro-German forces back.

The Italians have advanced again on the Austrians and even in the Dardanelles the allies have taken the offensive.

But in the west there are taking place the events which the world is most interested. At half a dozen different places, the French, the English and the Belgians have lunged forward after artillery duels lasting several days. That the allies have been victorious in this early fighting there is no room for doubt, but it is even more certain that they have a long way to go, before they can turn the Germans out of northern France to say nothing of Belgium.

The French at one point have taken 4,000 yards of trenches and have penetrated into the German line a distance of five miles. The English have won an advance almost as notable. Some 20,000 German prisoners have been taken, and, according to one dispatch "as the train loads of prisoners arrive, there is wild enthusiasm in Paris." A dispatch says that 60,000 Germans have been lost in the fighting, but the dispatch is from London, and while it is probably true no mention is made of the number of French and English killed in the battle. The attacking forces, in modern war, always lose at least as much as the defenders.

The issue to be decided in the next two days is—can troops equipped with modern arms and burrowed into trenches be turned out and thrown back? If the French penetrate the line, the question has been answered, in the affirmative. But the task is difficult and dangerous.

Germany is now represented in the news dispatches as rushing a quarter of a million of veterans from the eastern front across the empire to the fighting in Flanders. She can well spare these troops at this crisis, when Russia has not only halted but has given successful battle to the Teutons.

The present attack is the culmination of the year's effort of England to put into the field an army adequate to her wealth and to her resources. This army, trained and equipped, is a little upward of 8,000,000 men. But men only count as a part of a great offensive; artillery and unlimited stores of munitions of war are equally important. This, too, has been the task to which England and France have set themselves—the accumulation of sufficient stores of munitions to drive the Germans back.

The resources of the British government devoted to supplying the munitions of war have been exerted to the limit, as well as the resources of the war department to get recruits to fill up the English line. Month after month, factories have been running in England at full speed, even women and children running the machines for making shells. In France equal sacrifices for the making of guns and shells have been made.

Now the word is given, the cannons speak in thousands of voices, and the French and English leap from their trenches.

We live in the greatest hour for the making of history. In the trenches of Flanders, along the Russian rivers men are dying by the thousands. The powerful empires of Europe are making or breaking their fortunes. The court of war is making its verdict on the boundary lines of the European empires. The fate that fortunes of unborn millions depend upon the arbitration of the sword.

The battle, or the series of battles, may not be decisive. They may open the way for final decision, or they may end in another deadlock. It is probable that they will culminate in another deadlock, but in spite of the deadlock, the final outcome of the war, months in the future, may be indicated.

The Message Got There.
Dr. Norman MacLeod, the famous Scottish divine, before visiting India, called on an old Highland woman in Glasgow. "When ye gang tae India," she said, "ye'll be seein' ma Donal' that never sent the scrape of a pen tae his mither since."

"But, Katie," said the doctor, "India is a very big place and how can I expect to find him?"

"O, but ye'll just be askin' for Donal', what for no?"
So, to please the old woman, he promised to ask for Donald, and he conscientiously kept his word, says the Scottish American. At various ports he made inquiry among British ships, although it seemed very much hay. But it is the unexpected that happens. As Dr. MacLeod's steamer went up the Hoogly river an outward-bound vessel passed close by. A sail and moved by a sudden impulse, the doctor shouted out:

"Are you Donald MacTavish?"
To his intense surprise the man answered, "Yes."

Dr. MacLeod had only time to shout: "You're to write to your mother!" as the vessels drew apart. The result of this amazing meeting was that the old lady received a penitential letter from her long-neglected son.
